Some 500 or 600 laborers of Houston, mostly negroes, who are now wholly idle or who are at best engaged in the performance of "odd jobs" will be given regular employment for the fall and winter next week, when the cotton seed oil season begins. Houston's "tin bucket brigade" will thus be very materially increased and as a natural result the revepues of the local merchants will be added to in a corresponding ratio.

Notwithstanding the outlook for a short crop all over the State and the almost total destruction of the stable in the Brazos bottoms by the July overflow, the four oil mills in Houston anticipate a busy and fairly prosperous season. During the recent flood Mr. G. G. Garrett of White Switch came to Houston to secure the services of a physician to administer to the sick. Through Captain S. Taliaferro, chairman of the Houston relief committee, the services of Dr. G. V. Westgate followed Mr. Garrett back to White Switch and remained with him several days as his guest. He then went over to Mr. J. R. Carrol's place and on returning to White Switch he advised Mr. Garrett that he thought he would remain at Mr. Car-roli's as it would save him a long, hot ride across the prairie. But subsequent developments proved that the objection to a "long, hot ride" was not the true reason for Dr. Westgate desiring to remain at Mr. Carroll's. There was another at-traction there in the way of a charming young lady, Miss Lorena Smith, a ward of the Carrolls. It was a case of love at first sight, but as the foster parents had formed signt, but as the toster parents had not other prospective matrimonial plans for the young lady, which were about to be consummated, the young Houston had to act kastily in the consummation of his heart's desires, and as love laughs at lock and bars, the young couple were not slow in developing their plans. They boarded a train for Houston and upon arriving at Chancyville the prospective bride and groom proceeded to the home of the father of Dr. Westgate on Washington avenue, where a license and a justice of the peace were in waiting and the two hearts were linked in the holy bonds of wedlock and Dr. Westgate reaped a richer reward than he had anticipated for his philanthropic mission.
